Nunavut Law Foundation New Public Representative

Kamele Lyall

The Board of DIrectors is pleased to welcome Kamele Lyall of Cambridge Bay as the Foundation's new public representative. Kamele joined their first Board meeting in July and will continue in this role at least until the spring of 2028.

The public representative plays a key role to liaise and strengthen ties between the Foundation, the public and the communities accros the Territory.

Kamele has a strong foundation in the history of Nunavut and the culture of Inuit from completing a high school diploma from the Kiilinik High School in Cambridge Bay. They built on this foundation through a one-year certificate program completed in 2008 offered by Algonquin College in collaboration with Nunavut Sivuniksavut. While at Algonquin, Kamele explored the Nunavut Agreement, Inuit history, Inuit's relationship with the government and deepened their knowledge of Inuktitut.

This expertise was then built on over several years working in Cambridge Bay, where Kamele worked in different positions in both the private and public sectors.

Today, Kamele is the Facilities Officer for Polar Knowledge Canada. A position they've held for the past five years. In their current position, Kamele is the conduit between the Government of Canada and private interest groups and contractors, and facilitates the planning and execution of the yearly business plan.

Between the federal government, the territorial government, the community government and a community organisation, Kamele has nine years of experience working for the public.

The Law Society of Nunavut also joins the Foundation in welcoming the appointment of Kamele Lyall who is welled suited in their role as the Foundation's public representative. They will bring invaluable knowledge and understanding of Nunavut's culture, history and insight on opportunities for which the Foundation can contribute and support, including ideas on how to increase outreach and how to assist individuals and organizations in securing grants and awards.
